"A magisterial survey of scientific knowledge about children's moral development, linked to a viable approach to moral education at home and in the community."

—Howard Gardner, Harvard University

Stanford Professor Education, Director Center on Adolescence

DR. WILLIAM DAMON

The Moral Child: Nurturing Children's Natural Moral Growth

William Damon is a leading authority on moral development through the lifespan, particularly the development of purpose and moral identity during adolescence. He has written numerous books on character development, and is the editor-in-chief of New Directions for Child and Adolescent Development and The Handbook of Child Psychology. Damon also serves as the director of the Stanford Center on Adolescence, a campus-based research think-tank that focuses on promoting moral character, good citizenship and civic education.
